The first man I saw in the bar was my Portuguese clerk named Sequeirs, who was speaking to two men who had their backs towards the bar. One was Mr Gilchrist and the other an employe of the P. and O. Company. I saw The a. s. Arrateon Apear, from Calcutta, a European lying on his back on the floor. I-noticed that the fender, a wooden one, had been pulled away from its usual position about nine inches. The man's head was within six inches of the fender. The two defendants and the cash-boy were behind the counter. There were some soldiers, sailors and civilians in the bar at the time. The piece of wood produced was one of the pore on April 9, and may be expected two pieces of wood used for tilting casks of liquor. The Indian watchman was standing at the Pedder's Street entrance of the bar, and I called him in and told him to call the police from Pedder's Wharf. Constable No. 35 came in and a gentleman who said he was a medical student advised me to send for medical help. I telephoned to the Civil Hospital. The first defendant was pointed out by the two Europeans-Gilchrist and Rasalvetas the man who struck the deceased. At that time second defendant said it was not the first defendant who struck deceased, and the Sikh watchman said the first defendant was not the boy he met running away. The second defendant said it was the cash-boy who struck deceased. The cash-boy was present at the time.
